Private Dargaville joined The New Zealand Army on the 9th October 1964 and after serving with the 1st Battalion, Royal New Zealand Infantry Regiment in Malaysia and Borneo, arrived in South Vietnam on 12th November, 1967 as a machine gunner with Victor Two Company, for service with the 2nd Battalion, The Royal Australian Regiment / NZ (ANZAC) Bn.

On the 7th February 1968<sup>1</sup>, during Operation Coburg in Bien Hoa Province, Victor Two Company was attacked by a strong enemy force. Private Dargaville was manning his machine gun in 6th Platoon on the perimeter of the company position. At about 0700 hours a squad sized group of enemy began to move down the flank which was covered by Private Dargaville, in an attempt to outflank the position.

Private Dargaville engaged the enemy with his machine gun, preventing the enemy from moving further forward. Each time Private Dargaville fired, he was engaged by the rocket launcher. After six rockets were fired at him, Private Dargaville crawled forward from his position until he could see the enemy soldier manning the rocket launcher. He threw grenades until this soldier was killed and his rocket launcher silenced. Private Dargaville returned to his gun position and continued to engage the enemy until they were forced to withdraw.

Again on the night of the 5th April 1968<sup>2</sup>, in an ambush position west of Hoa Long in Phuoc Tuy Province, Private Dargaville was machine gunner, when an enemy patrol approached his position. When the leading enemy was three yards from him, he opened fire killing this soldier. He then immediately trained his machine gun on the remainder of the enemy with devastating effect.
